OF STEALING

TORONTO, March 24. — John Doughty is guilty of theft of $105,000 in bonds belonging to Ambrose J. Small, the missing theatrical magnate, according to the verdict of a jury at the sessions this afternoon.

CALGARY VETS.
AND THE BONUS

In order that the federal government might receive first hand information regarding the stand of returned soldiers throughout the Dominion on matters relating to re-establishment with special reference to the cash bonus, the Calgary branch of the Great War Veterans' Association at the regular monthly meeting held Sunday afternoon in the Allen theatre, passed a resolution requesting the Dominion command to call a Dominion convention not later than the first week in May. The date of the Dominion convention has been set for July 3, but local veterans are of the opinion that this convention should be held during the present session of parliament. The resolution passed, reads as follows:

"That in view of the action taken by the special parliamentary committee on re-establishment in refusing to reconsider the question of a cash bonus, the Calgary local of the Great War Veterans' Association request a Dominion convention not later than the first week in May."

ELEVEN MURDERS
CHARGED TO FARMER
IN GEORGIA, U. S.

MONTICELLO, Ga., Mar. 28.—Two more bodies of negroes were recovered from the Alcovy river here today, making a total of 11 bodies found since the authorities began an investigation of charges of peonage and murder against John Williams, a farmer. Like the first three, found a few days ago, the bodies recovered today were chained together and weighted down with sacks of stones and iron. Five bodies were found Saturday, buried in Williams' plantation.

According to a confession made by Clyde Manning, a negro employed by Williams, the 11 negroes were slain and their bodies made away with in order to prevent them from testifying against Williams in the peonage charges. Manning confessed he killed five of them after he had pointed out the place of burial.

The coroner's jury, investigating the deaths, found that in two cases the negroes were compelled to dig their own graves. Williams and Manning are both in jail here under close guard. — Lethbridge Herald.

THIEF LOOTED EMPIRE HOTEL SAFE---GOT AWAY WITH CASH HAUL OF NEARLY $400
TWO HUNDRED DOLLARS IN CHEQUES

Between the hours of one and five o'clock on Wednesday morning the Empire Hotel safe was looted of its contents—about $390. The thief found the outer door unlocked and jimmied the inner compartment open, taking all the currency and even some stamps—not overlooking the cash register and even a two bit piece lying beside it. Two hundred dollars in cheques were left in the safe.

Discovery of the theft was made by Manager Swinarton, who had been phoned to at his home by a guest at six o'clock, informing him that the night clerk was not on duty. On arriving at the Empire from his house Mr. Swinarton found the outer door of the safe open, the inner door jimmied, apparently with a screw driver and nail-pull which were lying on the top of the safe (the screw driver having been broken in process of getting the inner box open) and the cash and the night clerk gone. The only train on which the thief could have gotten out of town would be the 5:15 going west.

The night clerk, J. Russell, is missing coincident with the disappearance of the money. A traveling man who went to Pincher on the 5:15 and returned later, and to whom the night clerk is known by sight, reports having seen him on the train between here and Pincher Wednesday morning. Russell had been in the employ of the Empire for four months and at the time of his departure had one month's wages due within a day.

OLD-TIMER
HAS FAITH
IN MACLEOD

"Undoubtedly Macleod will advance, there is no question about it"—These are the sentiments of Colonel Walker, the well-known old timer of Calgary, who was a visitor to Macleod on Saturday last, quoting these words in an interview with a representative of The Times.

Colonel Walker, who came to Albertan '74 is one of the best known old timers in the West today, also he is one of those who has made good. It has been many, many moons past since he lived in Macleod, but in spite of that there is still a warm spot in his heart for the first town of the West, namely, Macleod. Although he cannot give any explanation of why Macleod has not gone ahead like other towns, he is now firmly convinced that with irrigation promised our town is going to become one of the most important centres in Alberta and one of the chief centres of an agricultural district. He admires those people of Macleod who have had faith in their district although the outlook during the past years has been somewhat black.

Colonel Walker claims that is what

MACLEOD CROP
OUTLOOK GOOD

MACLEOD, March 24.—With abundant moisture in the ground and the top soil in ideal condition for working, it is highly probable that the next few days will see the commencement of seeding in the district to the south of Macleod. The warm weather, together with the heavy snowfalls that have been received here, and the absence of the high winds that have often worked havoc to the farm lands in previous springs, all appear to have been conducive to extremely early seeding and general conditions that hold the promise of 1921 being a banner year as regards grain production in the south. While the land to the north of the town is wetter than the districts in the south, and seeding will probably be later there, it is probable that the same good conditions will exist in both districts.

Last year the good conditions indicated by a long winter with lots of moisture were not realized, largely owing to the fact that high winds swept over the southern country before the seed had germinated in the ground, and the consequent soil drifting, coupled with continued dry weather in the late spring and early summer ruined many crops. It will be remembered that in 1920 seeding was delayed until later than usual by the early moisture that was so badly needed later in the season.

This year, however, the conditions are as nearly ideal as they have been in the memory of many farmers of the southern district. Moisture, well sunk into the ground, a fairly dry surface and an early season are factors that should make for a bumper crop. A large acreage will be sown, though not, possibly, as large as was put under crop last year.—Calgary Herald.

CONFERENCE OF PREMIERS

By T. W. Fraser
(Herald Press Bureau, Ottawa)

OTTAWA, March 24.—According to advice received here, the conference of Imperial premiers will begin in London about June 17, which would necessitate Premier Meighen leaving Ottawa about the first week of that month.

While there has been no official announcement on the subject, it is understood that he will be accompanied by Hon. C. C. Ballantyne, minister of the marine and naval service. The premier has promised that the whole agenda will be brought up in the house of decision before his departure and at an early date

THE MACLEOD
OLD-TIMERS
ORGANIZED

Colonel Walker, of Calgary, visited Macleod Saturday last, for the purpose of assisting the local old timers in forming an organization for perpetuating the deeds and chronicles of those who were instrumental in bringing this country to its present state of affluence.

A large and representative meeting was held in the town hall, amongst those present being A. H. Maunsell, R. Patterson, George Skelding, M.L.A., J. Stuttaford, H. Dowson, M. Scheer, W. J. Ryan, G. Rowley, Harvey Bruce, P. McCartin, W. Damon, H. G. Long, A. Scheer, G. Parker, R. E. Patterson, D. J. Grier, G. R. Davis, D. L. Davis, A. H. N. Kennedy, D. L. Morrison, G. Pearson, A. F. Grady, E. F. Brown, G. C. Ives, H. W. Bright and many others.

In calling the meeting to order Mr. Maunsell shortly outlined the purposes for which the meeting had been called and read the constitution and bylaws of the South Alberta Old Timers and Pioneers' Association. He then called on Colonel Walker, who in a few well chosen words told of the organization and objects of the association, of which he was president. A lengthy discussion then followed as to whether it would be better to form a local association or to join the one already formed, it was finally decided to form a local one and affiliate with the South Alberta Old Timers' and Pioneers' Association.

Mr. E. H. Maunsell was elected president; Robt. Patterson, 1st vice-president; W. N. Damon, 2nd vice-president; H. W. Bright, secretary-treasurer; directors: George Ives, R. B. McNab, George Pearson, Sgt. Major Armour, E. F. Brown and A. F. Grady.

The fees for membership were fixed at $3 per annum of which $2 was to be paid to the elder association and the balance to remain with the local.

THE BLOODS
WON'T GIVE UP LANDS

W. M. Graham, Indian Commissioner, of Regina, on Tuesday this week polled the north half of the Blood Agency with a view to receiving the verdict of the Indians as to whether or not they would surrender their rights in the above named portion of the Reserve, comprising about 126,000 acres of excellent farming lands situated 15 miles south-east of Macleod. The Indians voted against surrender by a majority of 43—99 for and 144 against.

MACLEOD DIS.
JUDGESHIP IS DISCUSSED

EDMONTON, March 26.—A reformation of the judicial and subjudicial districts of the province within the next few months was forecasted by Attorney-General Hon. J. R. Boyle in the legislature Thursday afternoon when during consideration of estimates, Dr. Stewart, Lethbridge, protested against district Court Judge McNeill being transferred from the Macleod district and no judge appointed to his position.

Mr. Boyle said he intended shortly after the session to have a conference with all the district court judges of the province and discuss the realignment of certain districts to provide for the creation of more subjudicial centres, and for the more frequent visits of judges to smaller centres, where time and expense could be saved by such trips.

Curse of Today's Law

As for the Macleod district, the attorney-general said the Dominion could of course act as they thought best in the matter of appointing another judge, but for his part he would not advise Ottawa to do this, and there was a tacit understanding that the province would make recommendations in this respect before a judge was appointed. Mr. Boyle said Judge Jackson would probably be well able to handle the sub-court at Macleod. In fact, there was as much work east of Edmonton, where no judicial centre was established, as in the Lethbridge and Macleod districts combined. Mr. Boyle fully agreed with A. F. Ewing that district court judges should visit smaller centres more frequently and save loss of time to witnesses. "The curse of the law today is its delay," remarked Mr. Ewing.—Lethbridge Herald.

HAVE FAITH
IN MACLEOD

N. W. Dilatash and L. A. McPherson, Jr., have formed a business connection for the purpose of conducting a garage and implement business in Macleod, having secured a two year lease on the garage formerly operated by Mr. J. A. Virtue. In conversation with Mr. Dilatash he expressed his faith in the Macleod town and district and is preparing to run an up-to-date garage and repair shop for cars and tractors and with the added floor space will carry a very large stock of farm machinery and repairs. Mr. Dilatash states that last year his firm sold $40,000 worth of farm implements and also ten gas tractors, which he claims speaks well for the farming industry in this community and The Times with pleasure wishes the new firm every success in their undertaking.

HIDDEN TREASURE

By DAVID WHITELAW

A NEW SERIAL OF LOVE, MYSTERY AND ADVENTURE

(Copyright, 1920, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Synopsis of Previous Chapters

Vivian Renton and Eddie Haverton, modern soldiers of fortune, have been gambling with Hubert Baxenter, a prosperous attorney, in his London apartments. After their departure late at night Renton returns to the house, murders Baxenter and hides the body on the roof. While waiting for night to come again in order to make his escape, he finds in a desk a curious old yellowed document telling of a mysterious chest left in the care of one of Baxenter's ancestors by a French nobleman, the Marquis de Dargigny, of the Chateau Chauville. The chest has been handed down from one generation of Baxenters to another and carefully guarded in the hope that some day its rightful owner will be found. Renton decides to pose as the missing heir and claim the chest. He goes to France to make some useful inquiries about the Dargigny family.

The story of the mysterious chest goes back to the troubled days of the French Revolution when the Marquis was staying in the fancied security of his chateau. His son Gaspard, who was active against the Paris Terrorists, learned his father's life was threatened and sent a friend, Remy Perancourt, to convey him and Gaspard's little daughter Sylvia to a place of safety in England. In their flight they were pursued by an evil-looking revolutionist. After vainly trying to dodge this pursuer Remy finally attacked him and trussed him up.

Another Victim

"So, my little Jaquelin—that will make nine since the 10th of August—no, don't shout, it's quite useless." As Remy spoke a gust of wind swept the orchard, moaning and rustling dismally through the branches. "Besides, it would only hurry matters—you would die a little earlier—that's all."

The man against the tree bent his eyes on Remy.

"And your reputation. I knew you as soon as you entered the room yonder. Remy de Perancourt knows most of the Public Safety men."

For a moment surprise drove the fear from Jaquelin's eyes.

"You are one of Gaspard de Dargigny's men?"

The man on the wall made a sardonic bow.

"At your service, citizen. We are a merry band, are we not? We pay in the coin we receive. 'Kill, kill!' yells the Tribunal, and 'Kill, kill!' say we. You have often wanted to meet Gaspard, eh—he whose lieutenants strike where they find? Why did you not call on the perfumier, Caron, at the corner of the Rue des Canettes?—what a rich haul you would have had! I am telling you this, Jaquelin, because secrets are safe with you forever. Tonight you go to your tribunal."

"You would kill me here—a bound man? Monsieur, you are a soldier—your honor!"

Remy slid down from the wall and brought his eyes very close to those of the informer. A new note had taken the place of the banter in his voice.

"Yes, you are bound; I would perhaps release you, but I have not the time. My brother, Armand de Perancourt, was bound when your hellish crowd delivered him to the executioner. Yes, there were women in the tumbril with him that day—bound—bound—all bound! Think you that Sanson or Oudrebancque would receive their guests for the fete of Madame Quillotine if they were not rendered helpless? No, little citizen, 'Equality' in all things. That is your watchword, is it not? We of Gaspard's company are sworn to kill when and how we please, so long as no mercy is shown. Does one consider the feelings of the viper beneath the heel—the manner of killing the rat?"

The man of the people did not take his eyes from his tormentor. On the gray face the perspiration stood out in little globules. He struggled with his hands and made as though to cry out. But the wind took the gasping moan which fluttered from his white lips and sported with it and whirled it out over the fields. Remy drew a pistol from his pocket and cocked it. He said no more after this, but sat and listened for a gust of wind of sufficient sound to deaden the coming shot. Jaquelin, divining his purpose, listened also. They could hear it away up the road, whistling through the little wood that lay on the hillside.

Nearer it came, plowing through the fantastic shapes of the fruit trees and scattering the blossoms like snow. Then it was upon them—passed and went sobbing away over the plains.

The grass at the spot in the orchard where the execution took place grew high, and a heap of straw manure stood near by. As Remy returned to the inn the moon coming from behind a bank of cloud shone on an apple tree, peppered with petals. The trunk from which the branches spread out their twisted arms was hoary with age and patched with gray green lichen. Near the ground there was a darker patch, showing with a sinister significance.

The hostess was in the kitchen when the young man pushed open the door.

"Your guest, citizenship, has decided to go on to Lilleburne. The rain has ceased and he has gone on foot. He wishes you to let the horse rest the night in the stable here and send it on to him in the morning at the 'Wolf'."

Left alone, Remy took out his pistol and on the stock of it he cut a notch, the ninth which showed there; then, taking the bottle and two glasses, went, whistling, up the little staircase to rejoin the Marquis de Dargigny.

The old man was standing at the window, but he faced round when his companion entered.

"What has happened, Remy? It was you, was it not, who went out just now? There were two—one only returned."

Remy Perancourt sat down on the edge of the bed and laughed shortly.

"Yes, there were two," he said. "I left the bantam from Paris in the orchard, Monsieur le Marquis." Remy looked at the nobleman keenly. "Perhaps you do not understand the work your son and his followers have undertaken? Six of us there were who met at the perfumier's in the Rue de Canettes—there are four now. The Committee of Public Safety are not the only men in France who prepare lists; there are others whose lists are every bit as fatal. The 'patriot' who lies out there was no mine. I knew him at once; Henri Jaquelin is notorious in the Marais section; it was he who sent the Comte de Massarey and his daughter to the guillotine. She was seventeen, monsieur—and as fair as a lily."

A sob came into the young man's voice and he paused for a moment; then:

"Can you wonder, Monsieur le Marquis, that we little band of men kill these reptiles when we meet them? All of us have lost relatives or friends; and until we, too, follow them to the scaffold we are sworn to kill. Oh! you have not seen what we have seen—you have not heard the prayers of maidens in the tumbril! It is not the people—the poor devils who swallow the lies of their leaders and are driven like a pack of silly sheep. They shout through fear of their masters, and believe me, I have seen the deeds of heroes among the canaille who surround the scaffold—have even seen a man smuggled out from among the condemned. Oh! I am anxious, monsieur, to get back to Paris and to my work. Perhaps my own time is short and there is so much to do first—so much—to do."

The Marquis laid his hand on the young man's shoulder.

"It is not for me to judge your actions, Remy, nor those of Gaspard. I can only weep for my poor country. We move in troublous times, without hope, without faith, and I cannot judge things by the old standard. We will go to bed now, Remy; we will start early tomorrow. Sylvia should be at Peccamp by now. God grant they have met with no mishap."

The Marquis de Dargigny slept but little that night. The wind moaned dismally around the eaves of the old buildings and whistled through the orchard. He thought of the man he had seen in the room downstairs, and in his imagination he saw the white face gazing up from the sodden grass, staring with unseeing eyes through the blossoms and leaves of the apple trees.

But Remy de Perancourt had no such morbid fancies. His tale would be good to relate at the next meeting in the Rue de Canettes, and he slept like a child, his hand clasped loosely round the stock of the pistol with the nine notches.

Two days after the happenings at the "Croix d'Argent" a little party could have been seen leaving the back door of the "Tavern de la Lune" at Peccamp. The little Sylvia, barely awake, lay in the arms of the old Marquis. Susan, stolid as ever, carried the purse and the small chest, which contained a portion of the wealth of the Dargignys, and which had been safer in Susan's care than that of the men. Remy was there, too, and a small, dark man, with rings in his ears, who led them down the steep path between the gorse-covered rocks to the little silver-crescent of sand.

By order of the authorities all sailing craft had to be unrigged each night, but here, beneath a rock a small rowing-boat lay in waiting; the oars had been buried near by in the sand but now lay ready to hand.

The sea was steel-gray before them, its surface cut up into little waves by the wind that was blowing from the shore. The eastern sky was aglow with opal and shell-pink. Half a mile from shore and almost hidden in the mists of the morning a chaste marble rode at anchor, her three masts showing faintly.

Remy watched the little party embark, waving to them as, under the strong strokes of the oarsmen, they sped toward the vessel. Then, when the mists had swallowed them up, he turned and set his face toward Paris.

CHAPTER VI.

The Body on the Roof

"Strange, isn't it, Cante, that Mr. Hubert hasn't written—this is the 21st?" The clerk, who stood by Robert Baxenter's desk in the green-curtained private office, gave a little cough behind the sheet of papers he held in his hand.

"Mr. Hubert, sir, likes to feel free when he goes away—wanderlust, I think they call it."

"Wander—grandmother! I know all about that. But this time I can't understand it at all. That affair of the Mackinnon Trust must be decided this week, and here's a letter from Captain Freemantle, saying he is calling today about the mortgage on Priory Manor. To tell the truth, I've never looked closely into that Mackinnon affair, and it's not like Mr. Hubert to leave things to the junior partner in this way. It rather puts me in a hole."

Robert Baxenter paused a moment, his brows puckered in annoyance, then:

"What hotel are you sending his letters to, Cante?"

"As usual, Mr. Baxenter, the 'Maurice.' If he leaves Paris he always tells the manager where to send on to."

"Then I think it would be as well if you were to send a reply-paid wire to the manager. Just ask if Mr. Baxenter arrived on the 15th, as he intended. I don't know what it is, Cante, but I have the feeling as though something were wrong. Send the wire, now, will you? We can go through the letters afterward."

The old clerk placed his sheaf of papers on the edge of the solicitor's desk and went back to the main office. Edward Cante had entered the firm of Baxenter in the late sixties and was now as much part and parcel of the establishment as the brass plate on the door, the keeping bright of which had been his early care. Slightly bald and with white hair and spidery side-whiskers, he looked all of the sixty-one years to which he laid claim.

The principals of the firm had time and time again thought of pensioning off the old fellow, but at the least suggestion of such a calamity the keen brown eyes, which seemed so strangely out of place between the shaggy white brows, would flash in defiance; and so it was more than probable that Edward Cante would live to his last day among the duty ledgers and jammed deed-boxes of the solicitor's office.

He took a sheaf of forms from his desk and wrote out the telegram to the hotel in Paris; then, ascertaining from Mr. Robert that there was nothing among the letters to need his immediate attention, he took down his overcoat, then his silk hat, from the peg beside the door, brushed it tenderly upon his sleeve, and passed out into the teeming life of the Strand. He dispatched the message himself from the office at the top of Arundel street and turned his steps again toward the Baxenter premises.

He had gone but a few steps when he pulled up sharp and turned to a little man who had touched him on the arm. The man was respectfully dressed, and his keen, intelligent face showed signs of nervous excitement and strain.

"Why—Jowett?"

"Oh, Mr. Cante, I'm so glad I met you. Mr. Baxenter—Mr. Hubert, I mean—is he in—can I see him—has he been here—has—"

Cante took the man's arm and led him slowly down one of the quiet streets that run steep down to the Embankment.

"Now, Jowett—one question at a time. What is this mystery about Mr. Hubert—what do you know?"

"I only know, Mr. Cante, that I was to return to meet my master at Mortimer Terrace yesterday. I went there—and again today. Perhaps you'll laugh at me, sir, but the house somehow looked—oh, I can't say how—only it looked deadly."

Cante turned on him sharply.

"Don't be a fool, Jowett; how can bricks and mortar look deadly? Come, we won't worry Mr. Robert yet; we'll go to Mortimer Terrace together."

The old man, without waiting for an answer, hailed a cab that was crawling up toward the Strand, and within half an hour they drew up at the residence of Mr. Hubert Baxenter. Truly the house looked strangely desolate, with its shrouded windows and the accumulated litter of bills and circulars on the dusty steps.

There are some who assert that a crime brings in its wake an atmosphere of its own, and that an intangible air of tragedy pervades the scene of murder. If this is so, then No. 9 Mortimer Terrace was surely beneath some evil influence.

Even old Edward Cante, prosaic as he was, felt it as he pushed open the little iron gate and made his way up the gravel path. It seemed to him that he stood on the threshold of some mystery and that discoveries and happenings were in the air. He looked at Jowett and saw the valet's face was chalky and drawn into tense lines around the mouth and eyes.

The old man gave a little cough to steady his voice.

"Have you a key, Jowett?"

"No, Mr. Cante; Mr. Hubert was to have arrived at Charing Cross yesterday morning very early—about five, I think. He would come home here and I was to meet him at nine o'clock."

The old clerk regarded the house intently, rubbing a nervous hand over his shaven chin.

"There is a window, perhaps?"

For answer the valet turned and led the way round to the back of the house, taking a little winding path half hidden by evergreens. He stopped at a square window which gaped light to the kitchen—a room which, although scarcely a basement, had its floor a foot or so beneath the level of the garden.

Jowett gave a look at his companion and began to work at the hasp with a penknife. In a few minutes the sash was raised and the two men stood together upon the floor of the little scullery which adjoined the kitchen.

If an air of horror had been manifested on the outside of the house, it was more apparent still in the musty interior. For some reason which would have been difficult to explain, Edward Cante walked on tip-toe, crossing to where the stairs showed dimly.

It was deadly silent, and as the men entered the dining room the scene of desolation and stillness was marked indeed. All was as it had been left a week ago. The cards lay scattered over the table, and a few had fallen on the carpet; the chairs seemed as though they might have been just pushed back when the players had risen from their game. The clock on the mantelpiece had stopped at twenty minutes to ten, and the air was foul with the stale odor of spirits and tobacco smoke. Over everything was a thin layer of dust.

Cante crossed the room and pulled aside the curtains, the rings making a harsh rattle against the brass poles. He unfastened the French windows and pushed them back, and the cool morning air seemed to leap past him into the house. He stood for a moment on the little balcony, then a cry from his companion sent him hurrying back into the room.

The valet was standing at the folding door, his face a mask of terror, gray and drawn. He was making movements with his throat and mouth as though he wished to speak, and he pointed with a crooked forefinger that shook pitifully to the pile of luggage in the corner of the bedroom.

"Look, Mr. Cante—I knew something had happened; I felt it—I packed those bags for him, Mr. Cante—my poor master never left London," and Jowett sank trembling on to the Chesterfield, his face buried in his hands.

The mystery of the situation was communicating itself rapidly to the companion. Cante touched the little man on the shoulder.

"Come, Jowett," he said, "this affair is too—Mr. Robert must be told. Come; don't touch a thing. This is a matter for the police."

Silently the two men looked up the windows and left the ghastly room. As they did so the old clerk stooped and picked up a small piece of folded paper. It was part of a sheet of letter paper; the few words on the fragment were unimportant, and were evidently part of a score of some card game. He slipped it into the pocket of his great-coat and left the house with Jowett.

When Cante entered Robert Baxenter's office that gentleman was reading the telegram from Paris which had just arrived. He was visibly excited.

"What does it all mean, Cante—my cousin never reached the 'Maurice'?"

"I know that, Mr. Robert," answered the old clerk quietly—and told his tale.

The detective sent from the "Yard" to inquire into the disappearance of Mr. Hubert Baxenter was rather a heavy official, and the secret of Mortimer Terrace might never have been elucidated had not a sweep's broom at No. 8 become fixed in the kitchen chimney of that residence a fortnight later.

The chimney sweep, ascending through the trap door of an attic to right matters, noticed a curious shape huddled beneath the coping of the next roof. Investigating further, he found that it was the body of a man—a young man in evening dress except for a Norfolk jacket, and that the cause of death was not apparent.

And then London roused and shook itself and said nasty things about the police and Scotland Yard, and gave themselves up to the delights of this new sensation. The illustrated Morning Press threw itself into the matter body and soul, and photographs ranging in interest from a picture of the late Mr. Baxenter at the age of twelve to the sweep's entire family taken picturesquely in a back garden kept public interest at fever heat until a divorce case of more than usual sporting interest pushed the crime of Mortimer Terrace into second place—and so by easy stages into the niche as another of the undiscovered mysteries of the Great City.

CHAPTER VII.

Alias Baptiste Dartin

Vivian Renton had in his short but evil life played many and varied parts, and his nefarious schemes had taken him often to the city which, being the hub of the ever-speeding Wheel of Pleasure, offers a happy hunting ground to those who live by their wits—and by the lack of them in others.

In fact, Vivian Renton knew Paris as he knew the palm of his hand, and his mastery of the language was no less perfect. Ordinarily his French possessed the cultured accent that one hears spoken so much in Brussels; but, did he wish it, he could roll out the idiomatic jargon of Montmartre or the speech of the provinces with equal ease.

It was not usual for the immaculate Vivian Renton to take up his quarters anywhere but within a hundred yards of the Place de l'Opera, and his friends would, had they known, have expressed surprise that he had this time chosen an unpretentious resting place in the Quartier. The Cafe du Dome was situated at the junction of the Boulevard Raspail with the Montparnasse, and Vivian found it both comfortable and secluded, and eminently suited to the game he had on hand. For it was a deep game and one which, for the present, he intended to play single handed. It was hardly likely that he would meet any of his acquaintances at the Cafe du Dome.

It is somewhat awkward when one is engaged in changing one's outward appearance to run against even the best of friends. It calls for explanations—and Vivian did not wish to explain his presence in Paris, nor the reason that he had altered the fashion and color of his hair, nor why he had decided that a pointed beard and waxed moustaches suited him better than a clean-shaven chin and lip.

And now it would have to be a very intimate friend indeed who would see in the little dapper Frenchman who, under the name of M. Baptiste Dartin, passed a placid existence at the Cafe du Dome, the erstwhile Vivian Renton.

The Metamorphosis from the Saxon to the Gaul had been as gradual as it had been thorough. During the time that he had been in Paris—and it was now mid-January—he had not been heard to utter a single word of English and he had never been seen reading an English paper. It would perhaps be useful, he told himself, in the future to feign an ignorance of his native tongue.

True, he walked each morning to the little kiosk opposite the Gare Montparnasse and purchased the Paris edition of the Daily Mail, but this was quickly hidden in the folds of Le Matin and read only in the privacy of his apartment, or perhaps some secluded seat in the Luxembourg Gardens.

He devoured with avidity the details of the affair at Regent's Park and he noted with satisfaction how his connection with the crime was not even hinted at. After all, he did not see how it could be otherwise unless he had left some stupid clue behind him. There was only one other man who was at the card-party at the solicitor's house—and Eddie Haverton was hardly the one, voluntarily, to place himself in the searchlight of publicity. His career was quite notorious enough without the aid of the

The citizens of Macleod own an Electric Light plant which was built with borrowed money, this money must be repaid whether the plant is used or not, and the citizens must find the money. Therefore good business judgment would dictate that this plant should be used up to its capacity.

It was another case in which the police were entirely at fault. London had been searched for the parties who had been playing cards with the deceased man. But not one knew of his acquaintance with Eddie and Vivian and there was no shadow of a clue.

He thought sometimes of the scrap of paper he had placed under the chair and which he did not remember having picked up again. But the few words which were on it had no connection with the case and certainly did not bear his name. A few notes he had taken on a game of cards—that was all, which could hardly be identified with him. He cursed himself, nevertheless, for his carelessness, and hoped that this faint clue had escaped detection. There was no mention of it in the papers, and Vivian told himself that had it been found it would have been photographed and published in the hopes of identification.

The man in Paris had noticed the accounts getting less and more meagre, until now, for a fortnight, with the exception of an interview with the sweep's aged mother, they had entirely ceased, and Vivian began to look into the task he had set himself.

The preliminaries, as it were, being now satisfactorily arranged and his identity sunk in that of Baptiste Dartin, he gave himself up, with the thoroughness which showed in all his doings, to the matter in hand—which was no less than to pierce the more-than-a-century-old secret of the wealth of the Dartignys.

He read greedily every line of writing he could procure from the archives relating to the history and records of the time of terror which swept France in the seventeenth-nineties. His room at the hotel was a library of books dealing with the period, and in Wallon's records he came across what he sought—the mention of the death of Gaspard de Dartigny. There were others of the family mentioned by Wallon who had come to the guillotine in those fatal years of '93 and '94—Gaston in June, Pierre in August, Sophie in the same month and Marguerite in the following January. Truly the hand of the Revolution had fallen heavily on the lords of Chauville. Vivian traced the origin and the history of the famous family and its many branches, and he put beyond all doubt that these red years had, to all intents and purposes, wiped them out root and bough.

But he decided to pay a visit of inspection to the district of Chauville. He would study also the archives in the adjacent town of Blois, giving out as an excuse that he was writing a history of the Revolution and was studying the subject on the spot. It was necessary that he should make himself acquainted with the chateau which he intended adopting as his ancestral home.

Still, Vivian told himself that it would be foolish to hurry matters. It would be as well for the Baxenter family to recover from one affair before another bolt was launched upon them in the shape of a claimant for the de Dartigny chest. Perhaps even the astute brain of the reigning Baxenter might be inclined to associate the two events, and the claimant had no wish to court more inquiries than need be.

It was a bright morning in early February when M. Baptiste Dartin set out to walk the two miles which separated the little village of Massey from the ancient town of Blois.

It had snowed heavily the night before, but now the sky was blue and cloudless, and the sun shone with dazzling brilliance on the white which mantled the plains and clothed the tops of the pine trees in the forests. A thin edging of ice rimmed the banks of the little marshy lakes, which, dotted here and there, reflected the glory of the morning sky. The towers and battlements of the town he had left behind him rose in graceful clusters above the snow-covered roofs. From the belfry of the church the sound of bells stole across the plain, melodious in the still air.

The traveller lunched at the comfortable inn which, together with the Chateau de Chauville and some half-dozen cottages, made up the village of Massey. During the meal, which he ordered to be served in the large front room, he entered into conversation with the landlord, who (the district not attracting visitors in the winter months) was glad to join M. Dartin in a bottle of the excellent claret the cellars of his inn afforded.

Yes, the castles of the country round Blois were very beautiful—monasteries going far—merely walked out from the town to lunch—yes—the snow had not been deep enough to make walking—on—ah!—but monsieur should stay the night—one day—two days—a week—there was no much to see—

The stranger interrupted the flow of talk.

"I have heard and read of the Chauville estate, and I—"

The excited little landlord of the "Three Lilies" jumped up, and crossing to the door pointed with many gesticulations to where two white towers with conical-shaped roofs rose above the trees.

"Monsieur is fortunate. Monsieur de Barron is away—oh, no, not Dartigny—they are dead—the caretaker is a friend of mine, a fine fellow, he will show monsieur everything. You would like to go to him?"

Dartin was anxious, but diplomatic. "Above all things—after I have had some of that delicious coffee which the good madame is preparing. It smells good, and—ah, a little drop of cognac."

A stone bridge spanned the half-frozen surface of the moat and led to the main entrance of the chateau, a massive gateway flanked by little white towers. Above it, on a block of stone, were the remains of a carved escutcheon, battered and defaced almost out of all recognition. The caretaker, who had been nodding over his fire in the little gate room, welcomed the landlord of the "Three Lilies" and his guest effusively. To show a stranger over the great house of which he held the keys was to him a source of never-ending delight.

As he led them through the courtyard his tongue was busy recounting snatches of the romantic history of the Dartignys. The old fellow seemed to live in the glories of the past. Here, from a doorway, the Marquis and a Monsieur Perceval took their departure, disguised as a wine merchant and his clerk. Yes, they reached England; but the nobleman returned, and he was not seen again after the death of his son. Oh! it was a sad time, that of the Revolution.

The old caretaker shook his head as he recounted the history.

"No, monsieur, there are no Dartignys left now. There was one who appeared as a claimant in the early part of 1800. He was an emigre, monsieur, and he had no money and could not fight his claim. He disappeared at last, monsieur, and went with two or three other ruined nobles to Ottawa to begin life again."

The chateau, the visitor learned, had been attacked by a mob of patriots led by a friend of Carrier, the infamous butcher of Nantes. This gentleman, with an eye, no doubt, to personal plunder, restrained the fury of the attackers, who, after demolishing the chapel and the carvings and armorial bearings over the gates and fireplaces and finding no living beings on which to gratify their blood-lust, passed on to more exciting game. The castle ultimately fell into the possession of a prominent Jacobin, who, shortly after the fall of Robespierre, followed his illustrious leader to the scaffold.

The estate after that had fallen into a state bordering on decay, until, in 1860, it was restored by a Monsieur de Barron, a financier, in whose possession it now remained. The building had changed but little in style since the days of the last marquis, and the new owner had so far respected history that he had left the battered escutcheons and restored only what was quite necessary to comfort.

The traveller from Blois was a good listener, and on his return to the "Three Lilies" he was able to fill two pages of his notebook with useful data pertaining to the ancient family of the Dartignys. The gentleman who had gone to Canada particularly interested him, and references to the notes which he had accumulated in Paris easily located him as the only child of a certain Yvette, sister to the Marquis. This lady, Vivian noted with satisfaction, ascended the scaffold in the Carrousel quite early in the days of the Terror.

He told himself that it was through this emigrant to the New World that his path lay to the chest reposing in the strong-room of the firm of Baxenter. For a few days he lingered in the neighborhood of the chateau, then returned to Paris.

On the 20th of February the good ship Touraine left Havre for Montreal. On its passenger list figured the name of Baptiste Dartin.

McBRIDE LAKE NEWS

House parties are the order of the day lately. Some time ago Mr. and Mrs. J. Britton celebrated their daughter Clarice's birthday with a party. Quite a large company enjoyed themselves dancing and card playing. Music was supplied by the Ardenville orchestra. A fine supper was served and the party broke up about half past two. Everyone having a good time.

Last Tuesday a very pleasant evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Shield at the lake. The guests amused themselves at cards and dancing to splendid music by Mr. Edgar's orchestra. Four districts were well represented—Ardenville, Allenfields, Rathwell and McBride Lake. A splendid supper was served at midnight and the party broke up about 3 o'clock. A good time was voted by all present.

The mumps have arrived in this district, but most of the cases are very light.

J. H. Evans and Jos. Shield will be leaving shortly with their entries to the Calgary Bull Sale.

Lawrence Storey, of Lethbridge, spent the Easter holidays at his home here.

Mr. A. Parker has purchased the farm of S. Gillespie and has taken up residence here.

CANADIAN PACIFIC ANNOUNCE

GREAT LAKES SERVICE

The Canadian Pacific Great Lakes Steamship service for the season 1921 will be similar to last year, according to announcement. The first sailing from Fort William eastbound will be the S.S. "Manitoba" on Thursday, May 6th, to Owen Sound. This steamer will ply on the Owen Sound route all summer, sailing each Thursday thereafter until the last trip, September 29th.

The S.S. "Assiniboia" and "Kewatin" will commence service between Fort William and Port McNicholl with the first sailing May 28th, thence each Wednesday and Saturday until October 1st. Special boat train will be operated in connection with these sailings, leaving Winnipeg Tuesday and Friday evenings. This train will operate through to the ship's side at Fort William, thus avoiding long tire-some transfers.

It's peculiar how young people in love think their judgment is better than that of people in their right minds.

It's the "little things" that tend to make the home happy.

The ones you do the most for are likely to do you the most.

An optimist is a man of 60 who thinks his 20-year-old wife married him for love.

It's peculiar how radically a woman's idea of interesting conversation will change as soon as she is married.

He who steals my purse steals trash; but he who robs me of my pork chops makes me poor indeed.

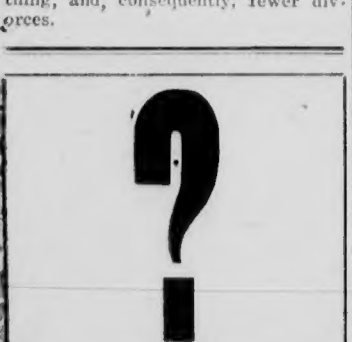

We haven't had a real healthy, able-bodied war scare for a month. What is the country coming to, anyway?

It's pretty exasperating to a fat man to have a lean man walk in his shadow on a hot day and laugh at him.

Sometimes it is pleasant to a young man to have a young woman sit down on him, and sometimes it isn't—it depends upon whether she does it figuratively or with her figure.

It's peculiar how so many prisoners escape by jumping through the windows of moving trains. Most people find a knowledge of acrobatics mighty useful in alighting unhurt from a train when it stops.

The majority of folks laugh at eugenics and other so-called fads, but if such fads were more generally adopted there would be fewer people getting married just to be doing something, and, consequently, fewer divorces.

"THE LAW AND THE PROFITS"

"Come Now, Let Us Reason Together—Come Now and Your Purpose Declare"

The Macleod Times has lately installed a feature service which in addition to former good service adds $44.00 per month additional expense: a serial story—home reading and children's weekly story places. The Times in the foremost ranks of Canadian weeklies—an interesting weekly newspaper—probably the best size in the Dominion. To maintain this standard, monetary outlay must be offset by monetary income. While the subscription price does not cover the expense of news service and print paper—yet it is, if realized on, a tangible help—therefore: The Times' management realizes the continuance of a high standard of service to subscribers depends to a great extent on The Times' subscription list being a paid up list—therefore, logically towards the end that this newspaper continue to serve its patrons at the present standard of excellence, sample copy and arrears readers must become paid-up subscribers and in following the argument to a conclusion the management feels justification in cutting off all sample copies and urging arrears subscribers to become paid-up subscribers that the efforts of The Times and its patrons in behalf of the interests of the town and district may go forward on a fifty-fifty basis by which neither will feel the qualms of evaded responsibility.

Commencing with the issue of The Macleod Times of March 31st, 1921, all sample copies will be struck from our lists—Those of these wishing to become paid subscribers may do so by payment of regular subscription rate of $2.00 per year and in case of missing copies of The Times of March 31 and April 7, may obtain same by application to the management in writing or person.

Book store and street price of The Times 10c per copy dating from and inclusive of issue of March 31-21.

CARDINAL GIBBONS SUCCUMBS AT HIS BALTIMORE HOME

BALTIMORE, March 24.—James, Cardinal Gibbons, archbishop of Baltimore and primate of the United States Catholic Church, died at the archiepiscopal residence today after a prolonged illness which mainly affected his heart. He was in his 87th year. The end came peacefully at 11:32 o'clock.

Cardinal Gibbons, who had been showing pronounced signs of improvement in health ever since his return home about January 1 last, from Union Mills, Md., where he was taken seriously ill early in December, suffered a relapse on Palm Sunday evening, soon after returning from an automobile ride. The sudden change of weather, which brought unseasonably high temperature, had a depressing effect upon him. His fainting spells returned and when he was put to bed it was realized by those closest to him that he probably never would again arise.

As it is expected that most of the church dignitaries in the United States will attend, it is probable that the funeral will not take place much inside of a week.

Cardinal James Gibbons was born in Baltimore, July 23, 1834, and was educated at St. Charles' College, Maryland, and at St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore. In 1861 he was ordained priest, and became Vicar Apostolic of North Carolina in 1868; Bishop of Richmond in 1872; Archbishop of Baltimore in 1877; and Cardinal in 1886. Among his most famous writings were: "The Faith of Our Fathers," "Our Christian Heritage," and "The Ambassador of Christ." Cardinal Gibbons resided at 408 N. Charles street, Baltimore.—Calgary Herald.

TREE PLANTING CAMPAIGN FOR PRAIRIE PROVINCES

The Canadian Forestry Association, which conducted a very successful educational campaign in the three prairie Provinces last summer, has decided to extend the enterprise this year so as to cover eight months. Mr. Archibald Mitchell, a veteran tree planter, will be again in charge of the Tree Planting Car, which made itself a welcome visitor in scores of prairie communities during 1920, is being refitted as a motion picture demonstration with a sloping floor and the most modern motion picture equipment. New picture films are being made ready for this year's campaign.

The direct object of the Canadian Forestry Association's campaign, is not only to beautify the homes of the prairie settlers, but to combat the increasing damage through soil drifting and the blowing out of crops by getting popular co-operation in the planting of wind-breaks of trees. The remarkable effectiveness of thick shelter belts of trees is now widely recognized by prairie settlers. Recognizing the great value of this enterprise to the southern portions of the provinces, the Saskatchewan Government granted the Forestry Association one thousand dollars to assist the campaign this year.

AGRICULTURAL INSTRUCTION

An insight into the progress that is being made in agricultural instruction, both for adults and juniors, is to be gathered from the report of the Agricultural Instruction Act for 1919-20, recently submitted to the Dominion

Parliament. Under this Act $1,000,000 is now divided annually between the nine provinces of Canada with a view, as the report says, of aiding and advancing the farming industry in Canada. That the objects sought are being attained is shown by the review of the situation regarding agricultural instruction as it now exists in this country. Schools have been established, colleges extended and brought nearer to the farmer, research has been greatly encouraged, the agricultural representative system has been aided and fostered, home life improved, school fairs have been brought into being, and knowledge in every branch of agriculture and domestic science has been made more readily available. How the funds forthcoming under the Act are applied is illustrated by the fact that of an allotment $256,413, was devoted in 1919-20 to the Agricultural Representative system, and $644,070 to instruction and demonstration. Boys' and Girls' clubs were extensively aided, and women's institutes, homemakers' clubs and similar organizations, had their funds augmented in such a manner as led remarkably to their growth and increased spread of their usefulness. How important a figure in the direct advancement of agricultural instruction the Act is, will perhaps be best appreciated by the fact that in the six years of its existence $1,890,143 has been allocated to colleges and schools of agriculture, exclusive of veterinary colleges, to which a special grant of $20,000 is made annually. The problem facing those responsible for educational policy, says the report, is to provide adequate educational opportunities for those destined for country life, and that in large measure is the purpose for which the funds granted by the Act are being used.

THE PASSING OF THE RANGE

BY W. H. REDWINE, WINNIPEG
(Copyright applied for. All rights reserved.)

I am nothin' but a cow-boy, and I guess I'm odd and strange, But it nearly makes me sick to see the passin' of the range. It seems to be decided that the range has got to go, The cow men are admittin' this, and well they ought to know, So there'll be no more big roundups, nor a campin' on the plains, While the stars are whisperin' to you and the dreamy silence reigns, No more wanderin' up and down the trails, for they say the Progress Plow, Needs the acres for the millions that's a-pushin' westward now.

There's to be no more of singin' with the joy that's in your breast, There's to be no more of laughin' where a feller laughs his best, There's to be no more of evenin's spent in jestin' by the fire, Where each one just seemed tryin' for to be the biggest liar, There's to be no more listenin' to the north wind moanin' round The corners of your camp house, scarcely clingin' to the ground, There's to be no more moonlight dances where old faces loved to come, Where their eyes kept talkin' to you, tho' their lips were sometimes dumb.

There's to be no more livin' way out here 'longside of God, The feller with the hoe is comin' to claim the native sod, Soon the wheat fields will be stretchin' o'er this great green grassy sea, Where the waves a-comin' to you set your pen to poetry; Where old Nature sings of something sweeter than you ever knew, While you dream of childhood's posies and the places where they grew, Where there's just a sea of blossoms stretchin' out before your eyes, And a depthless blue is hangin' in the turquoise-tinted skies.

Where the wild wind laughed and called you goin' up the lonesome trails, And the white clouds in the distance looked like ships with silver sails, Where you half forgot the cattle was pokin' on ahead, And you let a daydream get you and just follow where they led, Where we broke the buckin' broncho and lassoed the maddened steer, Where we slew the fatted buffalo and pursued the fleetin' deer, Where we rode the winding circle in a sort of aimless way, Or went gallopin' together up the range on brandin' day.

Holdin' thousands of wild cattle in a herd without a fear, Ropin', throwin', tiein', brandin' on the freedom fraught frontier, Where we slept upon our sogauns, after hours of ridin' hard, With our saddle for a pillow and our broncho for a guard, Where we looked off to the eastward as the horizon dropped down, And we knew the dusk was stealin' through the byways of the town, Then old memory came a-slippin' up behind and roped our heart, And we somehow had a feelin' that we'd missed the sweetest part.

Then you thought of other years, and felt yourself a sort of wreck, And you kinder longed to feel a woman's arms around your neck, You can get along without her when the day is full of swing, When you're livin' in the saddle, and the hours are on the wing; But you're mighty sure to want her when the evenin' shadows fall, For there's nothin' like a woman clingin' to you, after all; I'm sure no richer blessings can your cup of fortune fill, Than those furnished by a woman—if she only will.

Well, the cowboy days are over, but we ain't the ones to fail, So we'll get our plunder ready and prepare to hit the trail, We would all be lost, I'm certain, in a nature plowed and mowed, For we've been too used to freedom on the ranges Nature grewed, Where now the gentle sycophant steals the perfume from the rose, Where the poplar bends its branches, and the yellow daisy grows; Will be heard the sound of reapers swellin' to the summer sky, The hoarse song of the field hands and a mother's lullaby.

Now I reckon you've a notion I'm a-talkin' sorter odd, But we loved the boundless prairies that seemed leadin' us to God, And I wonder if the people that's a-comin' on today, Will remember how the cowboy went ahead and blazed the way, Course we can't help kinder thinkin' that we've played a losin' hand, And I fear the comin' tenderfoot won't hardly understand, It was ours to rough it, maybe, and to go ahead and lead; So the critters that's a-comin' now wouldn't frighten and stampede.

But now that things are ready and our work has all been done, We'll turn our faces westward toward the settin' sun, All the papers are a-sayin' that the big ranch days are gone, So the cowboy and his broncho will be movin' further on, But I tell you it's a-breakin' of our hearts to say good-bye, To those glorious plains and flowers, to this matchless, dreamy sky, And I wonder what we'll do, we mavericks of human kind, When the range has all been taken, and there ain't no more to find?

The world has heard but little 'bout the part of us that's good, For the bad side's always foremost, and they've never understood, But we heard the same old stories that your mother told to you; I know that we are sorter rough—but we all had mothers, too, But some day the folks that's comin' though they think us odd and strange, Will drain their brimmin' glasses to the boys that rode the range, They will write of us in poetry, and sing of us in song, But I guess this will not happen until we're dead and gone.

We have had no costly steeples, pointin' out the way to go; But I low we didn't need 'em, for the boys all seemed to know, We have had no boiled-shirt preachers tellin' how we had to change, But there was no need of preachin' to the boys that rode the range, They were made out of the metal that, without a human guide, Could find the proper pathway leading to the great Divide, But when the world's a-throbbin' to old Gabriel's trumpet sound, And the folks begin to gather from the ranches all around—

When the ones the Church has branded marches up and answers, "Here!" With us poor dejected mavericks a-bingin' up the rear; When the human herd is waitin' there, in the great corral, Where the good you've done will find you, and they say the bad as well; Where we all shall face the Judge that will know where we belong; Where there ain't no buyin' over, and each must own his wrong— Well, I can't help sorter thinkin', though I spect I orten to, Old Peter will say firmly, "JUST PASS THE COWBOYS THROUGH."

BRINGING UP FATHER

The New Twenty-year Capital Return Policy

(Issued by The Canada Life)

A Young Man and His Future

He takes his first step in business affairs, is examined by the doctor, and creates an estate of $5,000.

He improves the shining hour and impresses upon an important person that he is in possession of an "estate."

His tendency to save and invest is noted by his employers.

He finds his savings of great assistance in buying a home.

And as time goes on he is enabled to enjoy many of the good things of life.

Absolutely guarantees the return at the end of twenty years of all annual deposits, with accumulated profits, after giving you insurance protection for twenty years.

Easily Understood:

1st. Deposits are made yearly. This is what you are saving, and at the end of 20 years the Canada Life guarantees the return of every dollar paid in.

2nd. Your life is insured from the day you make the first deposit—for $5,000, or whatever amount you decide.

3rd. Dividends are paid at stated intervals in addition to the return of all deposits at the end of 20 years.

4th. These dividends may be used to reduce the amount of your yearly deposits, or be allowed to accumulate at interest for 20 years.

5th. The cash value of Policy and Dividends represents a valuable asset, useful in business, and your "estate" is protected by the insurance.

6th. At the end of Twenty Years you can draw out all you have paid in, along with the accrued dividends—

---or--- you can draw a Special Cash Guarantee, together with the Accumulated Dividends, making a substantial sum, and leave the $5,000 Policy fully paid for and continuing to earn Dividends as long as you live—

---or---

this Special Cash Guarantee may be applied to increase the amount of your policy to more than $7500.

An Immediate Estate

The great advantage over any other form of investment is that a small percentage paid yearly creates immediately an estate of $5,000, or more.

These active, progressive years of life in which you are earning the most money are the years in which premiums can be more easily met.

NEW ORLEANS CHICKEN MARENGO

This is prepared very much like smothered chicken, except that with the chicken are fried 2 or 3 shallots, a clove of garlic, a bit of bay leaf, a sprig of parsley and a pinch of thyme. The dish on which the chicken is served should be a large one, so that a border of poached eggs on toast triangles may be placed around it.

"HOPPING JOHN"

Pick over and wash 1 cup cow peas. Soak overnight in cold water. Drain and add 6 cups cold water, a ham bone, 2 or 3 pieces of sausage (or a bacon rind), 1 onion, a pinch of laurel leaf and a small piece of dried red pepper. Cook until peas are soft. Add 2 cups rice and continue cooking until the rice is tender. Add 2 or 3 teaspoons salt when rice is added.

FOR THE CHILDREN

THE STORY OF WIGGLES

(Copyrighted by British and Colonial Press, Limited.)

PART TWO

Poor little Wiggles was too small and young to know that Pedro the monkey was not his friend. Pedro had such a funny little face and such comical ways the puppy had often been amused by his antics, so when Pedro carried him off, Wiggles thought he was in for a good afternoon's fun.

"Where are you taking me?" Wiggles asked at last, after he had been carried far from the tent. Like the good puppy he was, Wiggles remembered that his mother did not like him to go far out of her sight.

"I know where there are some nice bones," Pedro fibbed in the very kindest voice he could put on—for the sly monkey did not want Wiggles to raise a cry before they were far on their way.

Wiggles, like any other puppy, liked bones a great deal, and he felt quite grateful for the monkey's thoughtfulness.

On, on trudged Pedro, never seeming to tire, even though Wiggles was not a light burden.

Finally the puppy became uneasy. "I want to go back," Wiggles declared. It's getting dark and my mother will wonder where I am."

"You'll never see your mother again," the naughty monkey said gruffly. "I've stolen you."

"Stolen me!" barked little Wiggles as he wiggled out of the monkey's grasp and started to run away. "I'm going back myself, Mr. Monk, and with that he ran off as fast as his little legs could carry him.

Alas for Wiggles! The bad monkey Pedro laughed and chuckled with glee, for he knew only too well that the puppy could not find his way.

It was a wooded country to which Pedro had carried Wiggles and it was not long before the little fellow's flight was stopped when he stumbled over a fallen tree. So heavy was Wiggles' fall, the breath was knocked from his little fat body.

Where could he go? What was he to do? Wiggles lay on his back and whined dismally.

In the meantime old Bruno, the bear, was following the monkey's tracks in search of the kidnapped puppy. Bruno had followed many a trail with his mother when he was a bear cub and had been a free bear roaming the woods. In those days he had been searching for food, but now he was searching for something even more precious, he thought—for he did want to make nice little Betty, the Boston terrier, happy by bringing her puppy back.

"Ruff, ruff," Bruno snarled in true bear-fashion as he travelled along; and Pedro, the monkey, perched in a tree top saw and heard him approaching. Like a flash Pedro swung down from the tree, found Wiggles where he had fallen and carried him kicking, biting and squeaking to the top of a giant tree.

Had Bruno heard Wiggles? Indeed he had. The old bear's ears were keen. How uneasy Pedro would have felt had he seen Bruno lick his lips in anticipation of a feast of monkey. But Pedro was not captured yet—nor was Wiggles safe.

EVERYDAY RELIGION

(By Dr. Thurlow Fraser.)

(Copyrighted by British and Colonial Press, Limited.)

"Say, boys, did you catch on to the Padre getting after me today? He was giving us some pretty hot shot about swearing by the name of Christ; and every time he scored a bulls-eye he would look straight at me as much as to say, 'Take that, Boy! You need it badly!'"

He was a rancher from Alberta who had served in South Africa, and now was an officer in the Great War. He was a giant in stature and strength, blackhaired, black-browed and swarthy, with a voice which upset the drill of other units at the opposite end of the parade ground. He used rough language sometimes. But he had a heart of gold as big as his body.

From that day till he died in battle near the end of the war, no one ever heard him use the name of Christ in profanity. He might use other language unusual in prayer-meetings. But that name henceforth was sacred.

There are many men who, under less trying conditions and with far less excuse, profane the Holy Name.

There are certain names which have gained distinction from the men who have borne them. Once a name has been connected with a man who is great and good, henceforth it is weighed with all the prestige of his record and character. Whenever we hear that name we think of the man who has made it famous. Such names as David and Isaiah, Homer and Plato, Shakespeare and Milton, Cromwell and Lincoln, at once call to mind great commanding figures who have made them honorable. We can scarcely think of anyone else bearing these names. It gives us a shock to find any of them attached to unworthy or disreputable people.

A number of years ago there was a certain settlement in Eastern Canada composed of ill-educated and ill-mannered people, all closely related and intermarried in defiance of the laws of consanguinity. They gave practically all their children Bible names. It was pretty nearly all the Bible they knew. Doubtless it was so much. But the effect was rather trying to other people.

It was the good old days of taverns and road-houses every mile or two, and liquor flowing at every country dance. It used to give a shock to more religious people to see Elijah and Elisha go staggering drunkenly along the road; to know that Isaiah and Ezekiel had got full and punched each other's faces, and to hear that Amos and Hosea had been fiddlers at what was locally known as a "hoedown."

There was something shockingly incongruous in these honored names in such associations.

Yet however great the men were who first ennobled these names, there are other names as honorable as theirs, others which will live as long in human history. When we come to Jesus it is different. There is no other to be placed alongside of Him. There is none to be compared with Him. It shocks us to hear some disreputable person named after one of the immortals. We would feel that it was blasphemy if anyone dared to call his child by the name of Jesus. Once in Hong Kong we came in contact with a half-caste Portuguese to whom his parents had given the name of Jesus, and who wore and signed it. Even after making allowance for the difference in national traditions and sentiments, it gave us a feeling of repugnance towards him that he should dare to wear such a name.

Yet this Holy Name which we regard as too sacred to give the most beautiful, most innocent and best-loved child, we still often use in profane and obscene associations.

Probably it is mostly the fruit of thoughtlessness, an ill habit slipped into through hearing others, and allowed to grow until it becomes hard to break. But when brought to mind it ought to be resisted and overcome.

In this connection the Roman Catholic Church has a very commendable organization. It is the Society of the Holy Name. By a simple pledge its members bind themselves to refrain from taking the Holy Name in vain. In remembrance of this pledge they, as a body, receive the communion four times a year. That organization and pledge might very profitably be copied by other churches.

Habitual swearing does not strengthen statements. It weakens them. Unmeaning repetition wears out whatever force it is supposed to have. People come to look on the man who habitually uses profanity as less reliable than the one who does not. They discount his statements. His language grates on their ears. It offends their finer feelings. It breaks a commandment of God.

Why not cut it out?

BRITISH EDITOR'S OPINION

The Macleod Times has just received a booklet entitled "What British Editors Say about Canada," which has just been issued by the Canadian Department of Immigration and Colonization. It contains brief comments on Canada made by members of the Imperial Press Association who visited this country last summer. The booklet has been issued mainly for circulation in the Old Country, and readers of this paper may have copies forwarded to any friends in the Old Country who are interested in Canada by sending the names and addresses to the Director of Publicity, Department of Immigration and Colonization, Ottawa. No charge is made for the booklet or for postage on it.

J. Bawden challenges comparison of his Barred Rocks and Rhode Island Reds for appearance, weight or laying capabilities.

Turn some pigs loose in a swamp infested with rattlesnakes and watch the fun. F. V. Williams did not do exactly that but he tells in April "Rod and Gun in Canada" what happens when swine meet serpents. Mr. Williams tells of the snakes found in the vicinity of Tobemore, and what happened to them when some pigs were turned loose to slay and slaughter. "A Happy Hunting Ground" is the title of the leading story in this month's issue of Canada's national sportsman's monthly. This article tells of the thrilling experiences in hunting bears in British Columbia. Nova Scotians will read with especial interest the story of hunting shore birds by Bonnycastle Dale. It tells of the difficulties to be experienced under the terms of the Migratory Birds Convention Act. In addition to these stories and articles there are nine others that will delight the heart of the nature lover. The Guns and Ammunition department and the editorial comment on the gun permit law will take the attention of the gun "crank" while Robert Page Lincoln and George Goodwin take care of the anglers and dog men, respectively. "Rod and Gun in Canada" is published monthly at Woodstock, Ont., by W. J. Taylor, Limited.

BEAUTY QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Is there any way I can get rid of moth patches on my face and neck?—P. S.

I have it on good authority that the juice of the pineapple is an excellent remedy for these blemishes. Certainly this fruit, if used freely, both outwardly and inwardly, will improve the texture of the skin in a wonderfully effective and surprising manner.

I have numerous liver blotches on my neck and they are spreading toward my face. Can you tell me of something that will remove them?—M. E. B.

Liver spots are often the result of improper eating, so to remove them most effectually there must be a careful and persistent adherence to the hygiene rules of living. The diet should be sparing and fruit freely eaten. A little fresh lemon juice in a glass of water just before meals will be highly beneficial.

What can I do for the black-heads and pimples with which my sixteen-year-old daughter's face is afflicted?

Mrs. F. The hot water treatment for pimples is more efficacious than most medicines. The daily application of soft cloths dipped in hot water has effected a cure within a few days. Black-heads are more obstinate to deal with, but they can usually be eliminated by nightly applications of this remedy: Tincture of camphor ..... 1 dram Precipitate of sulphur ..... 1 dram Rosewater ..... 4 ounces

Will you kindly let me know of a good treatment for enlarged pores?—Constant Reader.

An excellent astringent lotion can be made by dissolving a quarter of an ounce of borax and a half an ounce of glycerine in a pint of camphor water. Apply a little of this with a soft cloth several times daily.

My scalp is always itchy, although I have no dandruff. Please give me a remedy for this.—A. D. E.

An itching scalp is an almost invariable accompaniment of falling hair. To prevent this shampoo the hair at least once a week with the following:

White of two eggs; juice of two lemons; water, 1 quart.

Apply by rubbing the white of the eggs thoroughly into the scalp with the tips of the fingers. Afterward moisten the scalp with the lemon juice diluted with the quart of tepid water.

Rinse thoroughly and dry in the sunshine.

When very hot or very cold my ears become a beet red color and are also oily in the crevices. What can I do to overcome this?—Jack H.

There are many remedies which may be applied locally when the ears become unpleasantly red, and the same treatment will tend to lessen the disagreeable oiliness. Here is an astringent lotion that is excellent for this purpose. Apply it several times a day with a piece of absorbent cotton:

Muriate of ammonia ..... 1 dram Tannic acid ..... 1/2 dram Glycerine ..... 2 ounces Rosewater ..... 3 ounces

CLOSING EXERCISES
CLARESHOLM SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE

The Closing Exercises of the School of Agriculture, Clareholm, took place on the night of March 24, 1921. A large crowd gathered to see this annual closing function. On behalf of the Department of Agriculture and the staff of the School of Agriculture, Mr. J. C. Hooper, Principal, welcomed everyone. He was glad to see such a large number of ex-students present which showed that these ex-students were in close touch with their Alma Mater. He also stated that we were very fortunate in having with us Professor A. E. Ottewill, Director of Extension Department of the University of Alberta, to give the valedictory address to the successful students who were shortly to leave for their homes in the various parts of Southern Alberta. Mr. Hooper, in reviewing the history of development of Agricultural education, paid a high tribute to the very successful, efficient and economical system planned and outlined by Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture.

The establishing of the three Schools of Agriculture at Clareholm, Olds and Vermilion was briefly touched upon. To meet the needs and demands of the people in other parts of the province, it was necessary to establish three others at Raymond, Gleichen and Youngstown. A comparison of the cost and efficiency of Agricultural education in Manitoba was made with that of Alberta. In Manitoba the cost of buildings and equipment has amounted to about $5,000,000, which provides accommodation for 500 students. In Alberta allowing for the establishing of four more schools, 10 in all, and figuring cost of land, buildings, stock and equipment of all the schools and also cost of land, buildings, stock and equipment of the Agricultural Department of the University of Alberta—total cost will not exceed $2,000,000, and which will provide for 2500 students as compared with 500 of Manitoba.

The Principal thanked the executive of the various organizations connected with the School of Agriculture, for the efficient and business-like manner in which they conducted the affairs in 1920-21. The valedictory address given by Professor Ottewill was a very excellent and instructive address, very appropriate for the occasion.

Mr. Ottewill, in his usual clear and pleasing manner, converted the subject "The Why of Education" from one of the intangibility to a vital, potent reality, in which the Canadian people from the oldest to the youngest citizen should be interested. Education is one of the greatest factors, if not the greatest factor, in the solution of Canada's economic problem of the present times. If we are to pay off the war debt of $250.00 per capita most surely and quickly, education must not be thwarted but encouraged and we must be willing to finance and support our system of education in the same spirit as we financed and supported the allied war machine.

The speaker, by the use of that most comprehensive tool, the graph, clearly showed how education enabled the individual to reach the highest efficiency as a citizen. He pointed out that the more highly trained and educated the individual was, the later in life did he reach his or her maximum efficiency, but on the other hand the longer was the period of usefulness and earning capacity. As Mr. Ottewill cited, the graph disappeared at the upper corner of the sheet and was still going up.

In his farewell remarks to the graduating class the speaker endeavored to impress upon their minds the necessity of the most successful agriculturalist having a broader education than those in any other profession. He further urged them to let no minor issue sidetrack them in their pursuit of higher learning, for in this way and

U.F.A. CHOICE
AT THE HAT

MEDICINE HAT, March 25.—By an overwhelming majority Robert Gardiner, of Excel, has been nominated the candidate to contest the Medicine Hat constituency in the farmers' interests in the forthcoming bye-election. In the two ballots taken he was the pronounced favorite and the convention later made this an unanimous vote.

The successful nominee was born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, and is 42 years of age. Before coming to Canada he was engaged in the dry goods business at York, Sheffield and London. He came to Western Canada in 1902, homesteading at North Battleford, Sask. In the following year he was elected to the municipal council of Meota, Sask. He filed one-half section of land in Alberta in 1911 at Excel, and has resided on this continuously from January, 1913. He was elected to the council of the municipal district of Golden Centre in 1914, made reeve in 1915, and has held that position ever since. He was elected vice-president of the Municipal District Association of Alberta in 1919 and the two following years. In the same year he was elected to the municipal hall board for a three-year term.

Popular Among Farmers

Personally he appears to be very popular with the farmers of the Medicine Hat constituency, many of whom assert that his seat in the federal house is assured.

The outstanding feature of the evening session was an address by H. W. Wood, president of the U. F. A., during which he most definitely stated that there could be no fusion between farmers and labor. "We have come to a place now where a mistake would be vital to the farmers' movement," he said. "There can be no two viewpoints in any one movement," he continued.

Mr. Wood, who, as usual, was received with a hurricane of applause, began his address by asking what that nomination meant. Replying to this, he said that it meant for the first time that they had begun to take an active interest in the exercise of their citizenship. "You never did that before in your lives," he added, with emphasis, "and it means that you have begun to develop a real citizenship capacity."

Who Are the Leaders?

Continuing, the president stated that two years ago they decided, as an organization, to take political action, and when their own executive committee first saw that resolution what was the first thing they asked? They asked where were the leaders? He wanted to ask who were their leaders that night and if some one had not been provided they would not have been ten per cent. of the development that was represented in the Medicine Hat federal constituency. "Your actions today means the life of this community and civilization," he added. "You are developing a capacity for self-government, and you never did that before."

Mr. Wood asked what made that possible. Replying to this again, he remarked: "Organization." For the past fourteen years or so they had been preparing for that day's work. That organization to which he referred to had been scoffed at by many people holding high places in the country. It had been treated with contempt and ridicule and spoken of as all progressive movements were spoken by just the same element of society who today were saying that the farmers were Bolsheviks and seditionists. The basis of their criticism was that farmers were an organized economic class, organized purely for selfish purposes. "You are an organized class," he continued, "and unless you can justify your organization on that basis that is the only basis that you can rest on."

Organization Justified

Proceeding, Mr. Wood said: "Are we justified in organizing on an economic basis?" He remarked that the reason they were organized was that they might develop an efficient group, and they could not develop an efficient group through any other method known to man. By that he meant an efficient social group. They could not deal efficiently with problems as detached individuals. Two million individual voters in Canada would never solve a single social problem, he said.

"All the problems of life are unsolved," he added. "We talk about taxes, banks, land tenure and railroads. Not one of these problems have been solved and they are not in shape to solve them either. They had to find some basis on which they could organize and develop an efficient group, but before they could find that basis, they would have to find an interest that was vital and that was economic interest. They, as farmers, had one common interest. Their interests were democratic, so were the interests of labor."

A Mistake Vital

"We have come to a place now," said Mr. Wood, "where a mistake will be vital to the movement. You cannot put two viewpoints in the one movement. All the strength you have today comes out of organization and out of organization alone, and just the minute that you get off that basis, disintegration begins to set in. All the strength you can hope to develop in the future," he added, "is going to grow out of this organization." Mr. Wood said that they were responsible for that movement, for the men they sent to Ottawa—Calgary Herald.

"PIRATE GOLD"—PATHE SERIAL

"Pirate Gold," a Pathe serial in ten episodes, starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot, is the title of the new episode thriller which has been booked as the attraction for Friday and Saturday each week at the Empress Theatre commencing next Friday.

Advance information on this new story of romance and adventure is to the effect that the prize which spurs the hero on to valiant deeds, that is, the prize held out as an "added attraction" to the hand of the beautiful heroine, is a treasure of gold buried in the waters of a cove on the Atlantic Coast.

Certainly it is worth speculating about, this story which deals with a Captain Kidd treasure laying about sort of serene-like in a busy harbor in this day of grace 1920, for it is a modern tale and does no flash-back to show a visualized dream of by-gone days.

Romance of this sort then is either perfectly possible of achievement by anybody sufficiently courageous and clever to go out and seek it right now, or the author of this serial is a fellow who does not care how he gets romance so long as he gets it. The latter eventually is not to be expected. Indeed, on past performances, Frank Leon Smith, the author of the scenario, has shown himself capable of giving us plays that bristle with life and reality, and there is every reason to expect that "Pirate Gold" will prove that we are not living in an age devoid of adventure, nor a country stripped of all romance.

So "Pirate Gold" promises delightful and interesting entertainment. From the purely amusement viewpoint it comes well recommended, for its antecedents are of the calibre of "The Perils of Pauline," "The Lightning Raider," "The Black Secret," "Bound and Gagged" and a number of other leading serial plays which have been offered by Pathe.

George B. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot, the stars of "Bound and Gagged," are again associated in the star combination in "Pirate Gold" and from all accounts they are as congenially cast in this new serial as they were in "Bound and Gagged." The support is made up of Harry Semels, famous for his many interpretations of heavy roles in Pathe serials; Frank Redman, Joe Cuny, William P. Burt and a number of other notables in the serial pictures.

It has been discovered that Rockefeller is descended from kings. Besides this, John D. drags in a few millions in royalties every year.

FARNUM HERE IN MYSTERY PICTURE

"Big Happiness" Gives Noted Star Opportunity for His Best Work On Screen

Mysteries are the spice of life. Inability to solve them creates deeper interest. One of the paramount issues in making a moving picture is the necessity of offering a problem and giving no intimation of the solution until the end.

Critics agree that just such a situation is presented with wonderful effect in "Big Happiness" Dustin Farnum's latest starring vehicle which will be presented at the Empress Theatre Monday and Tuesday. It is the latest production of the Dustin Farnum Productions Company and is released by Robertson-Cole as a super-special.

"Big Happiness," adapted from the novel by the French author "Pan," is a throbbing, pulsating drama of human passions in which Mr. Farnum, appearing in a difficult characterization, gives one of the most remarkable portrayals of his career. The picture appeals to all of the emotions. There are moments when you will find yourself balancing on the end of your seat, tense with excitement; there are moments of pathos when your eyes will be damp; there are many laughs and situations that will make your wrath rise.

A supporting cast of high merit is one of the outstanding features of "Big Happiness." Kathryn Adams, the sterling actress whose stage experience includes both musical comedy and drama, is the heroine. She will be pleasantly remembered in "Raffles" and "Baby Mine."

Others in the cast are Joseph J. Dowling, Fred Malatesta, prominent screen "villain" and nephew of the ex-Premier Nitti of Italy; William Brown, Aggie Herron and Violet Schram. The screen version of "Big Happiness" is by Jack Cunningham. Colin Campbell, who will be associated with Mr. Farnum for some time to come, directed.

EUGENE O'BRIEN HAS A BRILLIANT SUPPORTING CAST IN "SEALED HEARTS"

"Sealed Hearts" the Second Selznick Picture in which Eugene O'Brien is starring, will open at the Empress Theatre Wednesday for two days. Of noteworthy interest in this production is the brilliancy of the cast which supports this popular star, it being headed by Robert Edson on the one side and on the feminine side by Lucile Lee Stewart. Miss Stewart, it will be remembered, played a prominent role in "The Perfect Lover," which recently showed here.

Since Mr. Edson achieved his phenomenal success on the stage as the star in "Strongheart," his name has been one to conjure with in matters dramatic. His long and varied stage career includes an interesting and preponderantly successful series of "legitimate" productions, recently culminating in "The Good Bad Woman" and these successes have raised him to one of the highest niches in the theatrical Hall of Fame.

In all of his stage ventures, Robert Edson has been starred, just as he has been starred heretofore in practically all his screen plays and his presence at the head of Eugene O'Brien's support in "Sealed Hearts" is, therefore, indicative of the high plane on which this photoplay has been produced.

MADGE KENNEDY IN UNIQUE ROLE

Plays Part of Girl Pledged to Trap a Millionaire in "The Highest Bidder"

Madge Kennedy is seen at her win, some best in "The Highest Bidder," her latest Goldwyn Picture. Consistent playing of light comedy for the screen during the past few years has not effaced her very genuine talent for emotional interpretations, as is shown in the new photoplay, which comes to the Empress Theatre next Friday and Saturday.

Based on a story by Maximilian Foster, "The Highest Bidder" deals with the complications which ensue when marriage a la mode and marriage of a tender sort come into conflict. Miss Kennedy plays the part of a girl who has bound herself to "marry for money," as the saying goes. Fortunately, or unfortunately, she meets Henry Lester, a millionaire, who has long been convinced that women are only after his wealth, and not his heart.

At first he thinks that Sally is "different," but circumstances arouse his suspicion and becoming convinced that he has been dealing with a polite adventuress, he plans a bitter trap for her and introduces her to a supposedly wealthy man, who is in reality a beggar, picked out of the gutters by Lester. Formerly a blackguardly social secretary, the beggar plays his game very well—too well, in fact, for Lester, who realizes that he has fallen into the very trap which he set for Sally (Miss Kennedy). In the end, however, love, not fortune nor intrigue, proves the highest bidder and reunites Sally and Lester. Wallace Worsley directed this unusual production.

SELECTION OF FOWLS FOR EGG PRODUCTION

During the past three or four years knowledge pertaining to the selection of fowls for egg production has advanced by leaps and bounds, and public interest in this work has increased greatly.

In not a few cases commercial classes have been included in our poultry shows, and as a result commercial men are taking a more active interest in standard-bred poultry. Exhibitors in these classes should bear in mind the importance of having their exhibits in the pink of producing condition, for honors will be awarded by the judges in these classes to the birds that show the most marked indications of ability to maintain a high rate of production. In commercial classes, as well as in exhibition classes, only standard-bred birds that are free from disqualification should be received recognition. No consideration should be given to any bird that is not a typical, representative bird of a recognized standard breed. In the commercial classes less attention will be paid to colour than would be the case in the exhibition classes, while more attention will be given to such points as body shape and conformation which have a bearing on egg production.

Until recently the points that are considered as of importance in estimating a fowl's laying capacity had not been very carefully classified, and the average man was at a loss to know what characteristics to look for in selecting a laying flock. In 1920, however, at a conference attended by leading Canadian and American poultrymen, a schedule of points was adopted which provides a basis for intelligent selection, and its wider use cannot but help to establish, on more profitable lines, our commercial flocks of poultry. For the benefit of our readers we print the following notes, supplied by Mr. S. A. Bergey, of the Department of Poultry, University of Alberta, on the points that aid in selection.

Body Type
A bird of good body is usually well-balanced in that the body itself must be deep, showing a nearly rectangular form, well developed in breast and abdomen. Great depth of body is especially desirable, but apparent depth must not be due to loose feathering, which is generally shown by loose thigh feathers. Cockerin and exhibition game type and feathering are usually associated with poor production. Large capacity is essential if a hen is to lay long and heavily. Such capacity is designated by a body that is deeper at the rear end of the keel than at the front end. The underline should be fairly straight, and the back should be comparatively horizontal, prominent breast development, with evidence of a long keel, are desirable qualities in a high-producing hen. The general body conformation of a heavy producer conforms very closely to a rectangle with pronounced angles rather than smooth curves. A male shows the same general characteristics as a female except that the abdomen is not so deep.

A small-capacity hen generally stands erect. The body is either very shallow and cut away at the breast and abdomen, or, in the case of beefy individuals, the abdomen shows a pronounced sagging at the rear of the keel due to large accumulations of fat. Extremely poor producers frequently show a hump on the back.

Head and Adjuncts

One of the best indications in picking high layers is the fineness of the head. The head of the heavy producer is fine, showing a lean face, free from wrinkles and overhanging eyebrows. The wattles and carlows fit close to the head, and are not loose and flabby. The face is clean cut, the eye is full, round and prominent, especially when seen from the front. An eye which gives a clean-cut, wide open appearance is desirable. The eyeball of the heavy producer is generally set in the rear of a large oval socket, showing a considerable portion of the white eye membrane in front of the eyeball. The head of a heavy producer should be well balanced, being moderately deep and broad. The extremely fat, full head of the beefy bird and the long, thin, pointed head of the low vitality bird are both undesirable and should call for heavy cuts in this section. The low-producing bird generally shows a depressed eye with overhanging eyebrows and wrinkled skin at the back of the eye. The extremely long sharp beak is usually possessed by the low producer, while the medium stout, well curved beak is characteristic of the high producer.

Body Conformation

When taken in the hands, a heavy producer will reveal to the touch great depth of body, especially at the front and rear of the keel bone. The keel must be moderately straight, relatively long and carried well back. The space between the pelvic bones and the keel must be free from excessive accumulations of fat. Birds which are laying heavily can be readily detected by the development of the abdomen. Such birds will show pelvic arches which are widespread and a keel which is forced down away from the pelvic arches so as to give large capacity.

The poor producer generally shows a shallow body, especially at the front of the keel, a small shrunken abdomen, together with all evidences of small capacity.

Handling Quality

The skin of the heavy-producing hen is thin, soft, and pliable, especially the skin on the abdomen must be thin and loose. The skin of the poor producer is generally thick, hard, and rather coarse to the touch. The thin velvety skin is almost always associated with heavy ovarian activity.

Legs and Toes

The shanks of a heavy producer are flat, pliable, and smooth scaled. In hens at the end of their laying year, or pullets which have been laying heavily for some time, the shanks will be bleached out. The toes should be straight and the toe nails show indication of proper activity. The shanks of the poor producer are usually round, hard, and rather coarse scaled.

Conditions

A bird to be capable of highest sustained production must be first of all healthy. She must show vigor and activity and be well fleshed. Late moulting in hens is desirable. Early moulting and slow maturing, as shown by the primary feathers, should be cut severely. Late developing and late maturing usually indicate low production. In applying this section to hens, health and moulting conditions should be given primary consideration. In applying this section to pullets health and maturity should be given primary consideration.

Nothing Like Internal Bathing for Constipation

If people only knew what Internal Bathing is doing for thousands of others there would be fewer pills and laxatives swallowed, and very much less suffering from Constipation and the accompanying Stomach and Nervous troubles resulting from it.

J. A. Darrach, Copper Cliff, Ont., writes: "I have been using your J. B. L. Cascade for the past three months, and am convinced that it is the most modern and scientific method of dealing with constipation that has ever been devised, and I will lose no opportunity to promote its use among my friends, as I can speak truthfully and enthusiastically as to its merits."

By the proper application of Nature's cure, warm water, by means of the J. B. L. Cascade, the lower intestines are kept free from all poisonous waste. Drugs force nature. Internal bathing assists her.

Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell, of New York, a specialist on Internal Bathing, invented and perfected the J. B. L. Cascade, which has done more during the past 20 years in restoring health and lessening disease than all other means combined.

Ask A. D. Ferguson, Druggist, Macleod, Alta., for booklet "Why Man of Today is Only 50 per cent. Efficient." He will also be pleased to show and explain the J. B. L. Cascade to you, or write to Tyrrell's Hygienic Institute, 163 College Street, Toronto.

hoped that with the advent of spring, the roads will be such that every place will be visited from now till conference, when Mr. Day expects to be transferred from this district.

A man looking for work started from Macleod for Creekside Farm last week—on his arrival there he found the job taken, but stated to Mr. Canning that he did not consider the trip wasted as the treat of looking over the up-to-date poultry plant on the farm more than repaid the trouble of the journey out—he eventually went to work for a neighbor of Mr. Canning.

On Tuesday of this week Dr. Gumm, of Calgary, in conjunction with Drs. Kirk and Kennedy, operated on a number of Macleod children for enlarged tonsils. The youngsters were: Marjorie Fleming, Robert Warren, Thomas Warren, Betty Warren, Alice Freeman, Frank Brooks, Verdon Middleton, Jean Pringle, Dora Taylor, Mildred Wood, Buster Dunn and Alfred Rands.

H. H. Young wishes to announce that he has purchased the draying and auto livery business formerly conducted by George Marlow. All accounts due George Marlow in connection with the foregoing are payable to H. H. Young.

AMATEURS WILL PRODUCE AN EXCELLENT COMEDY

The Macleod Dramatic Society will produce the well known, three-act comedy, "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," at the Empress Theatre on Tuesday, April 12th. This comedy is one of the most successful plays that has been produced both in the Old Country and America, and wherever it has been enacted it has brought forth roars of laughter from the very funny episodes that take place.

The story commences with Mr. Temple, a wealthy, city business man, who goes out one night and patronizes the Ferris Wheel in the exhibition grounds, unfortunately the Ferris Wheel goes wrong and Mr. Temple together with an unknown lady is forced to remain in the clouds all night. He returns home in the morning and explains this to his wife, who refuses to believe him, therefore he concocts a story that he remained all night with a friend of his named John Brown of Pickleton. Mrs. Temple, who refuses to believe her husband's story, sends a wire to the fictitious address for Mr. Brown to call and see her. Mr. Frank Fuller, an old school chum of Mr. Temple's calls upon him and during his visit Temple finds out that his wife has sent the wire to the person of his story and to make matters come out alright he persuades Frank Fuller to take the part of John Brown of his romance, which he does.

Everything goes along fine until a woman calling herself Mrs. John Brown of Pickleton arrives on the scene and storms at Mrs. Temple for trying to make secret appointments with her husband. Shortly after a hairdresser's assistant calls upon Mrs. Temple stating that he received her wire and as he is Mr. John Brown he has come in answer to her appeal for a lover. The lady who was forced to remain for a whole night with Mr. Temple turns out to be Mrs. Frank Fuller, and you can readily see what comical, though terrible complications arise. Luckily the whole business is finally explained and the curtain falls as the Temple's and Fullers have again made up all their matrimonial differences and are going in to dinner.

Wigson, Mrs. Temple's butler, plays a leading part, either in causing trouble or else trying to save trouble. The play is one big scream from start to finish and as it is being produced by a company composed of well-known local talent, its success is assured.

Keep this date open — Tuesday, April 12th at 8 p.m.

The Calgary Herald in commenting on some of the dress rehearsals they have witnessed states that the Macleod Company compares very favorably with some of the first class professional touring companies.

THE CALGARY HERALD GAVE NEWS BOYS A BIG BANQUET

Did you ever go to a boys' banquet? Not a cake and sandwich feed, but a real honest-to-goodness soup to nuts dinner at night, and sit down with 200 healthy, happy boys with appetites like wolves' and digestions like ostriches?

It is not often that an opportunity like this comes to grown-ups but every year The Herald has its newsboys' banquet at which not only the Calgary newsboys are present but all the other newsboys who represent The Herald at its out-of-town points.

On March 18th in the Palliser Hotel ballroom the last and most successful banquet of Herald newsboys was held. Mr. J. H. Woods, managing director of The Herald Publishing Company, and president of The Alberta and Eastern B. C. Division, Canadian Press Association, gave the boys a heart to heart talk just like one boy to another. He was cheered to the echo.

The balance of the evening was devoted to amusements and there was plenty of good music supplied by a Calgary orchestra.

The entire expense of the banquet, together with the traveling and hotel expense of all the out-of-town boys is taken care of by The Herald Publishing Company, Limited.

Among the carriers who attended from out-of-town points are the following: R. Tolton, Taber; Hillyard York, Trochu; Chas. Marin, Howard Marin, Brooks; Cecil Prohberger, Strathmore; Harland Bailey, Jake Bulmer, Stewart Murdoch, Bassano; Allen Leach, Morlin Leach, Drumheller; Marlin Fairfield, Barons; Lyle Renard, Okotoks; Waldron Mitchell, Nanaimo; Danagh Smythe, Revelstoke; Ted Piskley, Penticton; Bert Roberts, Castor; Lawrence Mortimer, Drumheller; Billie Mills, Nick Smith, Fernie; Cecil Milley, Coleman; Frank Zhoya, Canmore; Lawrence Clenenson, Claresholm; Vernon Price, Youngstown; Robert McCausland, Alma McCausland, Irene McCausland, Macleod; W. C. Cummings, Ponoka; S. Volpey, A. Wade, C. McArthur, W. Brehm, A. Brehm, W. Mayberry, J. Hollingshead, E. Yoger, S. Phillips, Medicine Hat; Miss Hardman, R. Hardman, Red Deer, Jas. Collins, Pincher Creek.

There ought to be some statutory provisions about admission to the hall of fame.
